Dekenric Daniel Wiley
1975-2007

*Dekenric was the sun that brightened the day and kept the Flava Works Family together.
We will miss his unselfishness and generous personality that he shared with us all.
We mourn with you a great friend and leader.
Dekenric we Love You.*

*The memorial service for Dekenric Daniel Wiley took place in downtown Miami at Zorcao,
Dekenric's favorite restaurant in Miami.
His friends, all dressed in white,
shared their memories through tears and laughter.
It was a night of remembrance, joy and love.*

*As light gave way today
So did a change in the cosmos come about
A bright Star dimmed and twinkled out
Sending one last ripple out into that pool called eternity
Washing over us all one last time
With a sweet kiss good night
Out of a thousand things that had to change
Not once would I have chosen to have to say good-bye to you
My sweet "Tyler Rose" Sweet Dreams.*

YOU ME and YOUR SIDEKICK

By Taylor Siluwé

my ponderings of Shakespeare.

“Where you at?”

“On the train, nigga. Where you?” Chirp.

“Where else—work.”

“What y’all do last night?” Chirp.

“Nothin’. You?”

At first, I couldn’t believe this dumb muthafuka chose to invade my comfortable row of seats in the almost empty train car. But when their chat continued, getting less interesting by the nanosecond, a fire blazed in me and I glared at him. He paid no attention. He was far from cute (which would have been a mild consolation); but he was half my age and twice my size, which mellowed my urge to grab his phone and beat him with it. Not exactly the classy image I’d been honing; plus, what would Uncle Vic say when I showed up bloody—or worse, called to cancel from jail?

I spared the Neanderthal (and possibly myself) a beat-down by switching cars.

So as my little friend rudely pecked away on his Sidekick, that fire raged again. I was annoyed with myself for diddling someone half my age, but more pissed with him for claiming the ability to multi-task, which—he had the nerve to add—was a skill that eluded my generation. Still, reducing his gadget to a useless pile of micro-chips would be counterproductive to my sex life. I’d rather transfer my frustration to this long time cyber-friend who’d come to NYC on a whim, got and quickly lost his living and work situation in a hostel, and asked if he could stay with me for a few weeks. I’d agreed because I’m a good person and I know what it’s like to be young, new to the area and in need of a little assistance. Plus he’s got a 28inch waist with abs I could bounce my Blackberry off.

“You’re still sending resumes?”

When stuck between a rock and two hard places, the choice is easy when one is flesh and the other is a gadget.

We were watching season one of Sex and the City. In episode 4, ‘Valley of the Twenty-Something Guys’, Carrie had an epiphany after a drunken one-night-stand. As she staggered about his frat boy apartment and while he used the last of the toilet paper to make coffee, she realized she had outgrown the men of her past but not quite grown into the men of her future. A bell chimed in my forty-year-old cranium and I sat up so fast I got dizzy. I’m a lot like Carrie Bradshaw—the writing thing and the neediness, not the shoe obsession or the pussy—but as I looked over at a guy clearly of my past pecking away on his Sidekick for the fifth straight hour (through two movies and an oddly competitive game of footsie), a rude conversation I was forced to listen to simmered in my mind....

I was on my way to interview Jack Wetherall (Uncle Vic from Queer As Folk) about a play he was directing at The Shakespeare Theatre in Madison, New Jersey. I was nervous and excited about meeting my sentimental favorite from the show, and I was determined not to ask any sexual questions about my young blond masturbatory favorite character—Justin. This was going to be a serious interview for Out IN Jersey magazine, not one of my usual lascivious ones. As I was going over questions, a guy got on in Newark and sat next to me. A metallic voice disrupted

“Other stuff, too.”

“You ever think your cyber-obsession might be the reason you got fired in the first damn place?”

“See, you even don’t know what you’re talking about. I got fired for showing up drunk and high.” Oh. I remembered doing that myself once or twice. Shit happens when you’re young, so I could hardly hold that against him. Then he added, “We multi-task these days—remember?”

“Oh yeah,” I said, “My generation had to sit quietly to chew gum. I forgot.”

“Y’all had gum back then?” He smirked and I found it difficult to be angry, even when he joked about me going through my ‘rolodex’ to hook him up with a job. Still, it was my bed, and in classic only-child-style I banished him and his gizmo to the sofa. I had to admit though—as I tossed and turned sleepless and alone—his ability to send emails, carry on conversations, fire witticisms about my age, send chills down my spine with his toes, while not missing a plot point in the movies we watched was a notable feat. Still, a part of me missed the days before technology took off its clothes and crept into my foreplay. Was I hopelessly old school? And if so, why did other old school kats bore me to tears?

That NJ Transit train came back to mind. Then, I only had to get up and move to the next car to escape what has been described on the Boondocks as—and excuse the phrasing, blame McGruder not me—Nigga Technology, you know, “what one dumb nigga uses to talk to another dumb nigga about dumb nigga shit.”

My little friend is hardly dumb, and despises the ‘N’ word (thank the Gods for that), but was he destined to spend his tenure with me on the sofa? Was I fighting a losing battle with cool technology—however rudely applied? Or should I just be grateful that I captured the partial attention of a man who probably potty-trained with a gadget? Would I even have let him stay in the first place if he was forty-something with a gut?

Then I thought of my next trip to Madison for the opening gala of Uncle Vic’s play, Measure for Measure, which I’d planned to attend with another twenty-something morsel and colleague. The Queer as Folk cast were supposed to be there and I wanted to meet Justin with someone cute at my side. But my morsel canceled and I resorted to bringing someone my own age. To his credit, he never once pecked at a gadget (possibly because he dozed off and snored loudly all the way to the theatre). To my credit, during the champagne reception afterward, I only passive-aggressively dissed him by flirting with another twenty-something who’d caught my eye.

Ironically, while I pecked away on my own device writing this column and my little friend spooned his Sidekick on the sofa like his one true love, my forty-something theatre date called. Our conversation was pleasant and comfortable. We fit like two yellowing Converse All-Stars on a rack of brightly colored Nike Dunks, and we agreed to go out for dinner later in the week. Knowing me, I’ll cancel. I have no intention of booting the morsel on my sofa with all his gizmos, optimism and youthful mishaps for the comfortable man of my future with all his, well, you get the picture. Nope—I ain’t ready. Call me a Toys R Us kid, because I damn sure don’t wanna grow up. Or, maybe I just need drama to write about. Yeah. That’s it. I’m doing it for my art. How boring would I be if my only muse was a dingy old sneaker?

In a twist of fate my friend lost his Sidekick after a night of drinking and twenty-something shenanigans. I contained my smirk as he went through withdrawal, going teary-eyed and fetal on the bed. I canceled dinner with forty-something and consoled his virgin broken heart with a sensual massage down to his one remaining hard place, and began to wait for hints to be dropped about me buying him a new one. But he was shit out of luck there. I’m one lousy sugar daddy. I’m a starving writer not a rap star; keeping the lights on every month is a struggle and the only bling I own are the mirrored State Trooper shades I got at the dollar store. I’d happily spring for a matching pair, but that’s about all he’s gonna get. Well, mostly.

And that twenty-something’s apartment that mortified Carrie so, my little friend thought it was crazy cool. Truth is—so did I. Just as Shakespeare will always be relevant, I guess I’ll always be the twenty-something guy at heart and do all those irresponsible things.

Except for the toilet paper coffee filter, that’s just nasty.

Tyrese Wants to Ban All Dudes from His Upcoming Tour

by ROD McCULLOM

July was a memorable month for model-actor-singer Tyrese Gibson. After a string of less-than-memorable film roles, he opened the month by co-starring in Transformers which boasted one of the biggest opening box office weekends in recent history. At the same time, he also began touring the much-hyped Shirts Off Tour with fellow singers Tank and Joe. It was an interesting concept three former heart-throbs well known for their (former) muscular physiques. Unfortunately, the testosterone-laden tour bus has failed to generate much buzz.

It's not that Tyrese didn't try to generate interest. In late June, while giving interviews backstage at the BET Awards, the star of Baby Boy joked to reporters that he, Tank and Ginuwine (the latter would drop out, to be replaced by Joe) would be banned from wearing shirts on the tour. Then, he went further: "We're putting a ban on all dudes from coming to the show," he joked to reporters. "This will be for the ladies only."

Of course it was just a joke. Attempting to sell concert tickets and excluding men would violate numerous federal, state or local discrimination laws and, perhaps even more importantly, the concept would limit profits. Practical matters aside, the homophobic intentions were clear: No gays allowed. As a result, the has-been singer's joke created a huge controversy.

Gay fans were particularly upset. In addition to Tyrese's obvious singing talents (his self-titled debut CD went double platinum) the former Guess model has long attracted the attention of gay men with his sculpted abs and well-toned pectorals. Unfortunately, the love has not been reciprocated. According to Blogcritics.org, at a recent London concert, Tyrese threw his shirt into the audience and a gay guy caught it, and he stopped the concert and said "Naw, dawg, that was for the ladies" [Tyrese] made the guy give it to a girl.

The overt homophobia could be expected in rap but seems out-of-place coming from a former fashion model. "These aren't country bumpkins who have never been around a gay person in their lives," notes pop culture blogger LT Diniwiddie. "They're industry boys. They are surrounded by more gay people than any non industry person could ever be."

Compare that to the recent behavior of Enrique Iglesias. On June 5, the Spanish-born international pop star performed in concert at London's G-A-Y, one of the biggest gay clubs in Europe. The Latin singer stopped there as part of the tour of his brand new CD and the fans were treated to a special performance of his hit Hero. Normally, the singer serenades a female member of the audience but in this case he brought a young Filipino man on stage and serenaded him. Enrique ended the performance by wrapping his arms around the lucky guy and planting a kiss on his forehead.

"I was surprised it was such a big deal," Iglesias later told HX, the weekly gay magazine in New York City. "For me, fans are fans."

Too bad Tyrese hasn't received that memo. Meanwhile, Enrique Iglesias is performing to sold out crowds and the "Shirts Off Tour" has been forced to cancel some concerts.

On the RISE Battle of the SEX SIREN HOUSES

Well folks, one thing is for sure: summertime brought the kids OUT! Beginning with the POCC Ball back in June, the sex siren and body categories have really been "on a rise" (literally) lately.

But who's got the sexiest men in the land? This year three houses stood out in this category above all the rest. But who brought us the sexiest flava? Was it those Miyake Mugler boyz with all the chiseled hairlines, the careful manicures, the tailored features? Or was it the Balenciaga Badd-boyz with that urban B-Boy flava? Or might it be the Mizrahi fellas, slaying from state to state?

We wanted to have a little fun, so we thought we'd ask you:

Dominque Prodigy European Runway

It's been quite a year for Dominique Prodigy. He spent the first half of the year as a Board member of the New York City chapter of the legendary House of Mizrahi, but later left to return to his original house, the rocksocking House of Prodigy.

Over the course of one year, from roughly the POCC Ball 2006 to the POCC Ball 2007, Dominique showed us time and again why he's a force to reckon with on and off the ballroom floor for innovative effects and show-stopping antics:

The Road to Candyland

Remembering Leon Khan

1981-2007

This summer the ballroom community lost one of its shining stars, the up and coming Legend, Leon Khan. Entering the ballroom scene at the tender age of 14, for over a decade he reigned supreme as one of the scene's favorite personalities. From his early days in the House of Miyake Mugler to his later years with the House of Khan, Leon will always be remembered as one of the community's most charismatic and well-liked competitors in the sex siren and model's body categories. As a tribute, we remember some of his finest candid shots.

People of Color In Crisis Ball 2007: The Evolution of Standards

Through the growing democratization of the Internet, it has never been a better time for the creative arts. YouTube, MySpace, iFilm and a host of other sites are allowing creative voices to break through the hegemonic world of corporate media. One such voice is Dwight O'Neal, the executive producer and creative voice by Christopher Street - www.christophChristopherStreeterstreettv.com. I had a chance to speak with Dwight recently to discuss Christopher Street and how new technologies are allowing people new opportunities to bring their vision of the world to a mass audience.

Christopher Street is a testament to new technologies. You've made this pilot episode. You have this webpage. And yet most of us who are accustomed to niche programming are so through the more popular mediums like cable and the Internet. Tell us more about how you conceived your project and the way you went about getting it shopped.

Christopher Street was conceived from the lack of young LGBT [people] being on TV. I created the show to allow young LGBT [people aged] 16-25 the opportunity to see themselves on TV or the Internet. As far as getting the show shopped, we are able to do this with the friend (fan) base that the series currently has.

Tell us about the actors and the characters they play. How did you find them? Where did you audition? Were dialects a consideration? Christopher Street is from Tennessee. Is there a particular point of view you were trying to get across?

We had a casting call to book the actors for the show. I sought talent from talent papers, Internet, and scouting them in other performances they were currently involved in. We had our auditions in New York. It was important for three of the characters to be able to fall in and out of a Southern Dialect because they are from Memphis, Tennessee. I made Chris from Memphis because I wanted the South and Northeast to have their story told of being a young LGBT person of color.

Let's talk a minute about your tagline: "How many people does it take to hold a street together?" For any of our readers who might not understand that, what does it mean? Is it similar in spirit to: It takes a village?

This statement sets you up for what is going to happen with the show. You will see that "Street," is Christopher Street and we are asking how many people does it take to hold him together and the people that are holding him together are Ashton, Jharemy, and Shawn.

You mentioned that you have shopped the pilot around and may have some investors. Care to elaborate?

We are still shopping the series and I am currently looking for investors at this point. I am the only financial support system and we anticipate continuing production in October.

Who were your inspirations for this project? Was there one particular influence you can think of especially that helped shaped this project or your drive in getting this project going? What is your history?

My inspiration behind getting the project started was the lacking of role models for young LGBT. Influences for the show was life that either I have experienced or witnessed. Growing up and being curious about my own sexuality I learned many things through experience and sometimes that was not the best teacher. I don't want other young people to have to experience some negative experiences that myself or others have gone through.

What do you least like about today's crop of black programming? What do you like the most? What show, if I was secretly in position to help you, would you most like to be a part of other than Christopher Street.

I think there should be more shows that have positive messages for our people in general. Shows that show our community positively come and go; we need them to last. What I do like most about black programming is that it has some of the most entertaining pieces that you would ever have the opportunity to view. If I could secretly be apart of any other show right now other than my own it would be "Everybody Hates Chris." They need one of the characters from Christopher Street on there to spice things up a bit.

Which character do you most identify with if you had to pick one?

Ashton, many of his experiences I totally relate to. I have gone through the stage of figuring out who I am and what I want most out of my life and I have also experienced the shyness of accepting who I am.

You've shopped this project around at many festivals. Share your experiences.

It has been great shopping the show in general. We have received great comments from our friend base all around and festivals are excited to have this life changing piece apart of their various screenings.

IMPOSSIBLE DREAMS

A BOOK REVIEW

In "Impossible Dreams" the debut novel by Myklee Kane, we are introduced into the sexual, spiritual and, often times violent world of Atlanta society through the four main characters: Nikko, Zarius, known simply as 'Z,' Tré and Somalia, also known as Malia. The book traces the spiritual journey of these four friends as their lives wind around and through each other replete with all the drama and page-turning eventfulness that another storyteller from the 1970's and 1980's became famous for: Sidney Sheldon.

The main character is Nikko Grey the brother to Nikki Grey, Revlon supermodel and his twin sister. Nikko is happily married to Lake Cameron who Mr. Kane describes as such: "Mix Denzel's alluring power to captivate an audience, Shemar Moore's washboard abs, Tyson Beckford's complexion, and Shannon Sharp's body, and you had Cameron Lake." The problem, of course, is that if you don't know who these men are or don't happen to agree that Denzel Washington is captivating, you're going to find yourself in a bind; one of many that make this first literary attempt a troubling read.

Zarius, the second of the four characters, is the stereotypical hyper-bitchy, pedantic, effeminate drama queen. Quick with a comeback, Zarius, a registered nurse, glides through the various sexual adventures in his life with an admixture of defensiveness at being teased for the very qualities he not only personifies but promotes and a sort of hardened ardor of his reality - he is petite, effeminate and gay, qualities not exactly vaunted in the hyper-masculine world of the black male.

Tré, Zarius's cousin, is the complete opposite. Struggling to accept his bisexuality, Tré flirts with both the earthly pleasures of heterosexual sex (he has an ex-wife, Keisha and a daughter, Trevona) and the more complicated struggles of his attraction to men. His involvement with Lincoln Buchanan, an A-list baseball player who also happens to be bisexual but has integrated the duality of his nature much more successfully, only complicates Tré's internal struggles.

Rounding out the cast of characters is Somalia, a successful, aggressive single lawyer working at one of Atlanta's top legal firms who's intimately involved with a married man. She seems to relish the fact that it is she who's in control since Drayton, her love interest, is bogged down in a loveless marriage with kids and who seems to want the very thing he can't have. Naturally, Malia relishes the control.

The book is littered with dozens of other characters; love interests, friends, family members and sexual conquests come and go with remarkable alacrity. And the plot lines are absorbing even when they seem reshaped from any one of today's daytime soap operas: Victoria, the scheming legal secretary, Jeremy, the sexual dynamo with a secret drug habit, Cameron Lake, Nikko's almost mythically perfect lover with a secret that could destroy their state of perpetual bliss.

But at its heart "Impossible Dreams" is a story about spiritual salvation. It's a story about imperfect characters who frequently dialog with God about forgiveness, understanding, patience and all the other virtues that seem to be at times lacking in their lives. It's a universal conflict. How do we square the easy rewards of the good life with the more spiritually challenging but ultimately more satisfying prize of oneness in the eyes of God? It's a theme that has been explored since man first roamed the earth and reached one of its finer expressions in Herman Hesse's classic 1930 novel, "Narcissus and Goldmund."

The problem of course is that the author never really explores free will and the role it plays in the lives of his characters. When Tré, for example, discovers that Lincoln is not only bisexual but married with children, he continues his adulterous affair despite any misgivings he may have about his sexuality. We have to ask ourselves if there exists a separate moral universe in which these characters live where it's perfectly acceptable to be involved in adulterous affairs, be sexually promiscuous or have boyfriends that use drugs and then turn to God and say: I'm doing the best that I know how.

But what was most troubling was how Mr. Kane, who undoubtedly has a very good imagination, failed to use that imagination to describe in any detail the things that he writes about. For example, when Drayton shows up at Malia's place with flowers and her favorite wine, he's described as "wearing a blue-starched shirt and blue jeans, he was a vision of sex." Just exactly how wearing a starched shirt and jeans allows one to be a vision of sex or just what a vision of sex is anyone's guess but it's sloppy and doesn't nearly make up for Mr. Kane's gift for plot development. And, unfortunately, the whole book is plagued with just these sorts of hollow descriptions. As anyone who writes knows, the Golden Rule is always Show don't Tell. And after a while the effort started to seem less like a well-written novel and more like a contemporary starlet Tell All with, unfortunately, an even shockingly higher level of salaciousness. I understand the need to "keep it real" but after awhile all the 'motherfuckas' and 'pussies' and 'cunts' started to seem less like literary technique and more like personal psychosis.

Lastly, there is simply no excuse for typos and grammatical mistakes. I can forgive one but the degree to which Mr. Kane and/or his editor failed to check the book is deplorable but more importantly it undermines the degree of seriousness with which Mr Kane is to be taken. And that's a pity because if the author can bring his ability to describe up to par with his ability to develop a plot there will be a bright future for him indeed. The question is: Can he?

JAY-L

With a twinkle in his eye that matched the diamond stud glowing in his ear, Jay-L approached us at a Black Pride event with the question we like to hear most: “You guys lookin’ for dudes to pose for your magazine?” We could tell Jay was a little on the nervous side – as many a straight brotha is when standing in a crowd of gay and bisexual men – but he was immediately cool with the right for anyone to keep their sexuality their own, and was up for showing off his ass-ets in a magazine, “... so long as I don’t gotta go totally buck-naked.”

We were so caught up in that smoky stare of Jay’s – the way he cocked his head when he asked if we were interested, and licked those thick lips of his like the idea even sort of turned him on – that the brotha could have said he’d only pose in a freakin’ parka, and we would have accepted. Gay, straight, or bi – it’s all jood with us, so long as the brother is fine, sexy – and can exude, in a photo-shoot, all that sensuality that makes African-American men the sexiest on earth in the first place.

The Philly native came through, fine as any man we’ve shot – and afterward sat down for a few to let us know about the brotha behind those juicy peccs, to-die-for eyes, and that amazing, five-star behind (even if it is off limits to anyone but the ladies).

FL: How’s it going, man?

JAY-L: It’s cool; I had a good time.

FL: You looked great – no problems with the cameras?

JAY-L: Hell, naw. I was determined to do this, man – and I quit bein’ shy back in high school.

FL: Determined to do this? To pose?

JAY-L: Yep – I just finally busted up with this crazy woman I been seeing, and at da end she had some unkind words for me. Said I was never gonna make it, that I was too short and ugly and shit like that. I wanted to prove her wrong.

FL: Ouch – that was a pretty cruel female.

JAY-L: Amen, my brotha. I used to call her “Liberty Bell” behind her back, that bitch was so cracked. Am glad to be rid of her.

FL: But you wanted to show that her words weren’t only wrong – but in fact you’d have a lot of ladies looking at you now, thanks to the magazine.

JAY-L: Damn straight. Tha dudes too. I don’t care who looks, so long as you understand my love for ladies is pure, and come at me wit’ respect.

FL: Which Ms. Liberty didn’t.

JAY-L: Hell, naw – she was crazy. I’d date Medea ‘fore I go back to her.

FL: So what’s next for Jay-L? This your first professional job as a model, and do you plan more?

JAY-L: Yeah, it’s my first. I’d like to do more, but it ain’t likely – I’m too short. And this one was about as naked as I’m gonna go, so the adult industry’s out. Part of me wants to act, for real – be in somethin’ like “Boyz n the Hood” or somethin’. John Singleton, man that is one director I’d give pretty much anything to work with.

FL: So we maybe got the next Cuba Gooding Jr. here?

JAY-L: Only if you count up to his work in “Jerry Maguire” – before tha brotha trashed his own career. Now he’s wearin’ Michael Jordan’s drawers on TV commercials; man, talk about pathetic!

FL: So it’s career now? No more relationships after your cracked Liberty Bell?

JAY-L: Nah, I’m always open to meetin’ a nice girl. In fact, that’d be a nice change of pace now. There’s always room for a Juliet in this Romeo’s life. I’ve already lived through a lot in life – even at 20 – and know that anyone can get their dreams in life. You just gotta want it badly enough, and be willing to put the work in to get it. I don’t care what all these haters and players say tell you – there ain’t no easy way.

BOY U WANT MY BODY, U WANNA RIDE IT LIKE A HARLEY ...hmmmmmm

Whatever I Like...really... With the new single "Whatever U Like" this girl is poised for major label, major magazine and major dance-floor press. Ni-cole Scherzinger, really should change her name though, but other than that...this girl is ready. As lead singer for the PussyCat-Dolls this Divalicious lady has already garnered 8 top pop hits the first time around. What to do for a follow up? Well it is 2007, so that would mean a Timbaland produced track like "Whatever U Like" to get the blood pumping 2 months before the CD "Her Name Is Ni-cole" is even slated 2 be released. If Only Her name were only Nicole...lol.

The title of this months article, WORK THIS PUSSY cat doll, was meant to grab a gay's attention. So many Pussy tracks have been so popular with so many men that don't even like pussy. Ironic, don't ya think?

The Vogue scene really ran with it way back in the day WORK THIS PUSSY still rings over ever changing beats of the time. I have 2 also mention how crazy down in Miami the booty tracks are, there's so many pussy pop-pin' songs it ain't even funny.

Why do we as Gay men have such a fascination with that one thing that we have very little REAL desire to see, smell and or touch? Could it be that because of our lack of desire we eventually feared Pussy and Fear became comic relief. I mean going into a club with 1000 men dancing together and hearing "My pussy's burning" blaring over the speak-ers is kinda hilarious if u think about it. Very lowest common denominator kind of comedy, yet comedy all the same.

Some boys even like to dress up like girls and lip-sync the words to these songs...No, really it's true, they are called Drag Queens, or in the case of a transitioning male 2 fe-male, a transsexual. Of course I knew u knew that, just making sure your pussy was paying attention. DL Nicole and DL thePUSSYcollection.
