Is The M in Men for Magnet?

by TIDUS

"I'm done with men." You've said it before, and probably on more than one occasion. You try to make it work and your plans for a good relationship blows up in your face. He cheats on you, he lies, he just might be bored with the relationship. Even when just dating, you only seem to just run into triffin' ass brothas who do things from fucking everything in sight to playing childish games. And after all the drama is over, your done with men all together. Well, that's what you want to believe.

A while after swearing off men, you'll meet an attractive and distinguished man, who to you is "different" from what you're used to. He treats you right, takes you out, even the sex is great. You couldn't be happier and then it happens. The relationship makes a turn for the worse and he mysteriously doesn't act the same way he did in the beginning. He starts to cheat, he starts lying, he may even just start acting like an asshole. The relationship ends and you ask yourself "How in the hell did I get pulled back into this situation again?"

Don't feel bad. You love men. And loving men is a wonderful thing.

But what brings us back to dealing with them? Why not go straight?(yeah right) Will we eventually find that one worth keeping forever? How do we keep the one we want to be with? And why does looking for the perfect man have to be like searching for a pure bred dog in a room full of stray mutts?

But take time out to think about the physical attributes of a man. Solidly built with a strong body, from the neck, chest, stomach, back, arms, hands, legs, and feet. Oh, yeah don't forget to think about those lips, that dick, and that ass. Especially that Dick. Wanted to save the best for last. All of those body parts can make up one of the most amazing things that you can ever see.

Do you remember that first kiss that you received from another man? Do you remember the feeling that you got when you first had sex with another man? Do you remember the first time you first slept with the man you wanted to be with? How it made you feel to be held or to hold him close to your body? How about whenever the brotha that you've had your eye on for a while steps to you and tells you that he is interested in you? You know that feeling. THAT IS WHAT BRINGS YOU BACK!

Have you ever been with a man that looked so amazing and had such a great personality that you had to sit back and just stare at him, because you could barely believe that you finally found what you were looking for, even if he was a one night stand or just a good friend. If it hasn't happened to you yet, it will. But for all those ones who do know what it feels like can understand that you cannot always be with the one you feel is perfect, no matter how much you want to.

Many choose the rocky road of having high expectations at the "getting to know" phase of a relationship. Let it go! No man is the "Perfect Package." There will always be something about a man that you cannot stand. The trick is learning how to overcome that obstacle and make it part of your life. It doesn't have to become a significant part of your life, just enough to where you can handle it as a daily part in your routine.

Learning about your partner can benefit you before, during, and after the relationship. Don't just assume that just because you both are attracted to each other sexually that the relationship is going to work out. Most male/male relationships start off like that and suffer in the long run. Take time to pay attention to your partner's personality traits and habits in the beginning of the relationship and be open to let him learn yours. This will actually determine if the both of you can continue with a lasting relationship. And if it doesn't work out, take what you learned and use it to avoid trouble in a future situation.

Yet some obstacles between men cannot be avoided by just being understanding. Actions such as cheating are a main example of what cannot be tolerated over a period of time. It is true that what you won't do, another man will. So if you have the dedication, find out what you are not doing and make the commitment to keep your man. After all, the both of you should be able to do anything with each other.

But relationships aren't for everyone. These days there are a lot of happy single men out there and they just enjoy casual dating. Finding that one to date on a regular basis is a less stressful subject opposed to finding that one you will be involved with. Even though you don't lose sleep over it, you still run into the question "who would be good to date?" Nobody wants to be with someone who has been with everybody or someone who really isn't interesting.

Dating men is a subject that will always deserve its own book. Looking for men in spots like nightclubs, phone/online dating services, parks, and other meeting areas, will always expose you to men that physically look like men that you can see yourself settling down with. Well, until you actually meet them. A lot of those guys end up being uptight, self-centered, rude, and full of themselves. These men are great tools to learn how you deal with different personalities, but don't give up on them. Always consider the "ratio factor." There are millions of attractive men out there, and they all are not bad guys. Just don't use the bad experiences against the good guys, because then your no better than the ones that fucked over you.

Try meeting a guy outside of that 'gay dating scene'. Introduce yourself to that guy that looks at you extra long when passing him on the street. The cute cashier that makes sure his hand touches yours when he gives you your change. That "straight" friend that really enjoys your company a little too much(yeah, he's hiding something). There are a countless amount of opportunities to be attracted to the right one and end up in the relationship that you want to be in. Be cautious when pursuing that questionable man, a missed relationship can always still be a great friendship.

Yeah, most of the relationships we have in our lives may end sooner than we expect due to the person we're with or even ourselves. But it should not mean that we no longer want to be with a man. It's obvious that we are attracted to them and cannot be without them whether they are Black or Latino, top or bottom, has good ass or good dick. Something about men attracts us to them the same way two magnets are attracted to each other. They are attracted to us too, we're men, same difference.

Having relationships with men is like going to take a driver's license test and you have not studied in any way. You already know you may fail at it, but there is a slight chance that you will get what you want. Embrace that time that you do have with the man in your life and enjoy every minute of it. And if it comes to an end too soon, MOVE ON. There are far too many men that would love to spend time with a good man, so we as men should stop focusing on the ones who can't appreciate a good man when one is standing in their face. Life doesn't give us anything more than you can handle, so enjoy whatever situation you are in because you are the only one who can make it better. ▣

Harry Da Hood
THE LOVE YOU SAVE

Center City PHILADELPHIA, PA

Can somebody please tell me why is it so hard to find love?

Love? Harry you're trippin'. You better settle for what's right here... right now.

That's my point, why do we have to settle?

Created by: Harry James Pinkney Issue No: PG0001

Life is funny. We all say we're looking for love, but does anyone really know where to start?

For one Harry... you are way too picky, my Brotha. You need to lower your standards.

Shut up Hunter. Don't listen to him, Harry.

That's right baby-boy. Listen to Wes. Just because we're Gay, and absolutely fabulous, I might add, doesn't mean love isn't out there for us too.

What about my man over there?

The guy with the Leopard print shirt?

Awwww, hell-to-the-naw! His hairline is pushed so far back, it looks like it's on someone else's head.

Sure...you'll get plenty of advice from family and friends, but the one real sign you'll looking for is almost always never clear.

It shouldn't have to be this hard. Why can't I find a normal guy... minus all the BS and head-games? Somebody I could just chill with, you know? I'm at a point where I'm tired of trying, tired of looking. Maybe I should just concentrate on my career.

So we tend to do the easiest thing - Avoid it!

Speaking of careers, did you hear back from that one job you were waiting on?

Thanks for reminding me Wes. Let me check my messages.

Good Luck!

Wes, thanks for picking up the tab.

Now why is it that I seem to always hear that line when we come here?

Because you're the man. Honey, we love you... and besides, I'm broke.

Talk to me, Harry... You got the interview?

Then one day...

Oh, I'm sorry. That was totally my fault. Let me get that for you.

Naw, it's fine. I should have been looking.

Hi!

Hi!

Hello Cutie.

Hold on. They left a message.

Handle your business Dawg!

Got it! They want me to come in tomorrow at 2:00pm. You guys are my good luck charms. If I get this, I'll be rolling in the dough.

Might not be love, but it sure looks like the boy, found something.

Chile, forget dinner, that was dessert.

Don't be silly Hunter. I'll probably never see him again.

Then you better put your tongue back in your mouth.

Flava Corp. the Next Day

Hello Harry. He's expecting you. You can go right in.

Thank you.

Oh my God!

Small World, huh?

Life has a way of sneaking up on you.

You're the guy from yesterday.

Actually, I'm the Editor-in-Chief here at Flava. My name is Devin.

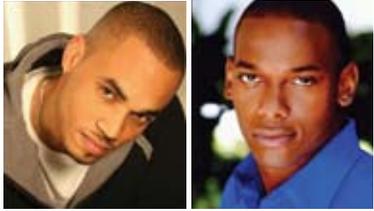

So, if you're looking for love... STOP! RELAX! And just surrender your head and heart to fate ...

Okay, Harry, you got this. Don't panic. The job is yours.

ON THE LOW

REVIEWED BY ROD MC

Deondray Gossett Delpano Wills

One of the strongest films of the summer-fall independent film festival circuit has been the short film On the Low. It's a true short—only 15:29 minutes—but what it lacks in length the film more than makes up in delivery and subject material. Why? On the Low chronicles two high school boys who fall in love and begin a “down low” relationship.

The movie centers around young Ty Evans (Deondray Gossett) who attempts to come to terms with feelings he has for his classmates. His male classmates—specifically his buddy

Kevin Banks (Delpano Wills). The two engage in brief experimentation, which leads to, well, more experimentation ... and then a schoolyard fight. As the sexual tension escalates, Ty begins to realize that what began as innocent curiosity has now blossomed into something much more profound. Confused, Ty seeks the advice of Mr. Davis, a teacher and mentor figure. The older man has some very succinct and wise advice for the boy: follow your heart.

For a short film, On the Low has some decent star wattage, boasting Martin's Tommy Ford as Mr. Davis. Young actors Deondray Gossett of Parenthood and Sister Act 2 and Delpano Wills of DarkTown are also industry veterans. On the Low was written and directed by Luther Mace, a producer/writer type who formerly crewed at Living Single and Martin. It was at the latter sitcom where he met Tommy Ford, who immortalized the character of Martin's sidekick. Luther Mace obtained a waiver from the Screen Actors Guild to make the experimental film, and then approached the sitcom star. Recently,

Mace talked with FlavaLife from his Los Angeles offices. “Tommy had some initial questions; his concern was that his character wasn't just a sounding board. Once we addressed those character points, he was on board. I'm glad that we did. His scene is so poignant.”

Ty's conversation with his teacher is one of the best-written scenes in the film; but the stand out scene of the film has very few lines. That's the first long, tender kiss enjoyed by Ty and Kevin. It comes across as oh-so-natural, but the director says the talent practiced three times—with tongue—until they achieved the desired affect. “Their scene had gentleness ... a tenderness. It was just lovely the way that Deondray stroked Del's head. This was the first time that the characters kissed. It was more like ... wonder. They didn't know what to expect.”

Apparently, Deondray Gossett was no stranger to the same-sex kiss on film. The director says the actor's “reel” —a short collection of his work on a tape, like a video resume—also included another gay kiss. “Well, at least we knew that he wouldn't be afraid to do what the role required. Later, when I took his tape home ... it was remarkable. I saw the tape and immediately he became Ty Evans. I knew that if his acting encouraged that sort of visceral response, he was the one.”

Luther Mace began writing On the Low in October 2003. He says it took several months to write, but he was in production by August 2004. The budget was extremely modest—“about six thousand bucks”—mostly self-financed. So far, the film has been a hit. On the Low has been invited to or screened at 22 film festivals. The big question: will he follow up with a feature?

“I'm trying to,” the screenwriter-director says. By day he works in administration at HBO, and his 9 to 5 has put some constraints on his time. But he's actively scripting a full-length feature; hopefully an independent studio will greenlight the project. But the basic story will not change. “On the Low is a coming of age film, and would remain as such,” the director insists. “There's always a temptation to try something different, or try to make more money or maximize box office. But I feel like, this is the film the audiences responded to. If they enjoyed what they saw, let me give them more of what they appreciated to begin with.”

WHEN WORLDS COLIDE

REVIEWED BY ROD MC

We've seen the new millennium usher in a black gay renaissance. Blogstars such as Keith Boykin and Jasmyne Cannick are making news and headlines around the world. Noah's Arc is on television, Punks and On the Low are on the big screen, and the bookshelves are overflowing with new titles. When Worlds Collide is part of that new literary explosion; it's one of the latest novels to explore the black gay experience, but the perspective is much different than the traditional, American black gay experience. The book relates the story of a gay black man born in the Bahamas, who journeys to Britain and later America to discover life and love. He develops a unique and lasting bond with two other people from very different backgrounds, whose worlds collide in England in the late 1980's.

This is the first novel of Bahamian-born Shawn Forbes, and already we're impressed. The main reason is that the novel is layered—it's not your usual three or four gay men living in New York City or Los Angeles, each with a fabulous career—but no romantic prospects. Sure, they are similarities to traditional coming of age stories; Worlds is also built around three friends, but there's a major difference. One is black, another is South Asian and the third ... is a white, Canadian woman. "Almost from the moment that I started writing, I realized that although the central theme was to surround the two gay men, I did not want it to be an exclusively gay novel," Forbes recently said during an interview from his home in Nassau. "I wanted to weave a human story against the backdrop of the gay theme. I wanted the potential reader—regardless of gender, sexuality or race—to find a bit of him/herself in the characters."

The setting is the late 1980s. Our protagonist is Stephen Taylor, a young Bahamian who has always had a strained relationship with his church-going family. He travels to Manchester, England for studies and meets Suresh Patel, a fellow student at the University of Manchester. Suresh is everything that Stephen is not; while Stephen is closeted, Suresh is out and proud.

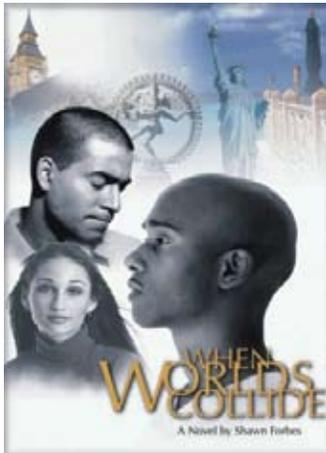

Stephen is reserved; Suresh is the witty queen who has always has the best comebacks. "If only everyone had a Suresh!" Shawn remarked in our interview. "He did, said and lived everything that everyone dreams about."

Stephen is a romantic at heart, while Suresh has perfected the art of the lunchtime pick-up. Suresh comes across as brash, bitchy and heartless, but it's all a coping mechanism—like many gay men, he also comes from a volatile family situation. Suresh takes Stephen under his wing, schools him on the nuances of the life. Stephen begins the book as somewhat of a pessimist, as evidenced by this passage early in their friendship when he discusses his prospects as a gay man in the Bahamas:

"Men are supposed to be strong and domineering. It's expected that they'll spend half of their lives conquering women and the other half talking about it with other men. ... Men who don't conform to that view are generally perceived as weak. The prevailing view of gay men is that they are hip swaying, weak-wrist sissies who all want to be women. I've met a few openly gay men at home. The ones that I have seen are ones that fall into that category. Believe me, their lives are usually made hell!"

Ouch. As we say here in the states, Stephen had issues—and his friendship with Suresh was the beginning of process to resolve them. Another step in the right direction was the third character, Tanya Collings. Tanya grew up in Canada's maritime provinces—Nova Scotia Prince Edward Island—and eventually made her way to the University of Manchester. Naturally, she is neither a man nor gay so your first inclination may be to skip over her sections. No. You won't be able to because Tanya's own personal background is quite touching; she suffered unspeakable horrors by her parents, and eventually escaped, albeit with physical and mental scars. But her strength and resolve are admirable, as well as her beauty. Suresh is the glue that binds the delicate balance of their collective friendship; unfortunately, he later becomes HIV positive and must fight for his life. After a long battle, Suresh succumbs to AIDS—and his death drives Tanya and Stephen apart, when they should be close.

Stephen's life takes a few major turns. He runs away from a pro basketball player who is in love with him. He returns to the Bahamas and tries to live a "normal life," even marrying Evelyn, a woman who has loved him for years, but he does not feel the same. Eventually, family tragedy sends Stephen over the edge and he suffers a complete nervous breakdown. Even though Suresh was the drama queen of the trio, we wonder, is Stephen making his own life worst? Stephen's life does improve after he decides to master his own fate. We won't give away the ending, but everyone's issues are resolved with supreme satisfaction—as well as several surprises.

When Worlds Collide is not the product of the typical avenue chosen by many authors, such as teaching, journalism, or a background in the arts or entertainment. Shawn Forbes has a fascinating and personal story—the thirtysomething novelist is a successful lawyer and banker. He studied at the University of Manchester, and later returned to Nassau to embark on successful career as a litigator, trust officer and banker. His life has just a few similarities to his main character, but that's it.

It's obvious that we like When Worlds Collide. But nothing is perfect—especially a first novel. At 500 plus pages, it's a long story and not for light reading. But there are advantages of reading longer books during these cooler fall and winter months. This would be the perfect read to share with a mug of hot cocoa or tea, or curled under the cover with that special someone.

CARLOS JACKSON

Age: 20

Location: Houston, TX

Sexual Orientation: Straight

Sexual Preference: Top

Relationship Status:

Single

Height: 5'8"

Weight: 160 lbs

hair: Black

Eyes: Brown

The minute we saw Carlos, we began looking around for The Beast 'cause we knew we had just found Beauty. We found this incredible, edible man in the Lone Star state, where Carlos made it clear that he was seldom "lone" ... and also which side his bread was most definitely buttered on:

"Man, I am strictly for the ladies," the straight, 30-year-old construction foreman tells us. "Though I get hit on by both dudes and females, all the time."

When asked how he reacts to men who come onto him, Carlos shrugs it off (though the blush that creeps up into his face from under the collar of his shirt is adorable). "Dude, I work on this body for a reason. I like people looking, don't matter who they are. It makes me hot, knowing someone is eyeing me, staring me down like they want this, and I got nothin' against gay dudes who appreciate."

But does having nothing against them mean he has never, and would never, take one up on the offer?

Carlos smiles his perfect white smile, turning playful. "Man, everyone got his private fantasies, ya know?" He bites on his upper lip as he adds, "but no, I haven't done somethin' like that. Yet."

Yet?

"Hey man, private fantasies are just that - private - ya know? But for now, I got me a girl - a fiancée - and all is good."

So ... Beauty has a Beast, after all. Envy aside, this is indeed sad news for us. But when we tell Carlos so, he laughs his deep, husky laugh again.

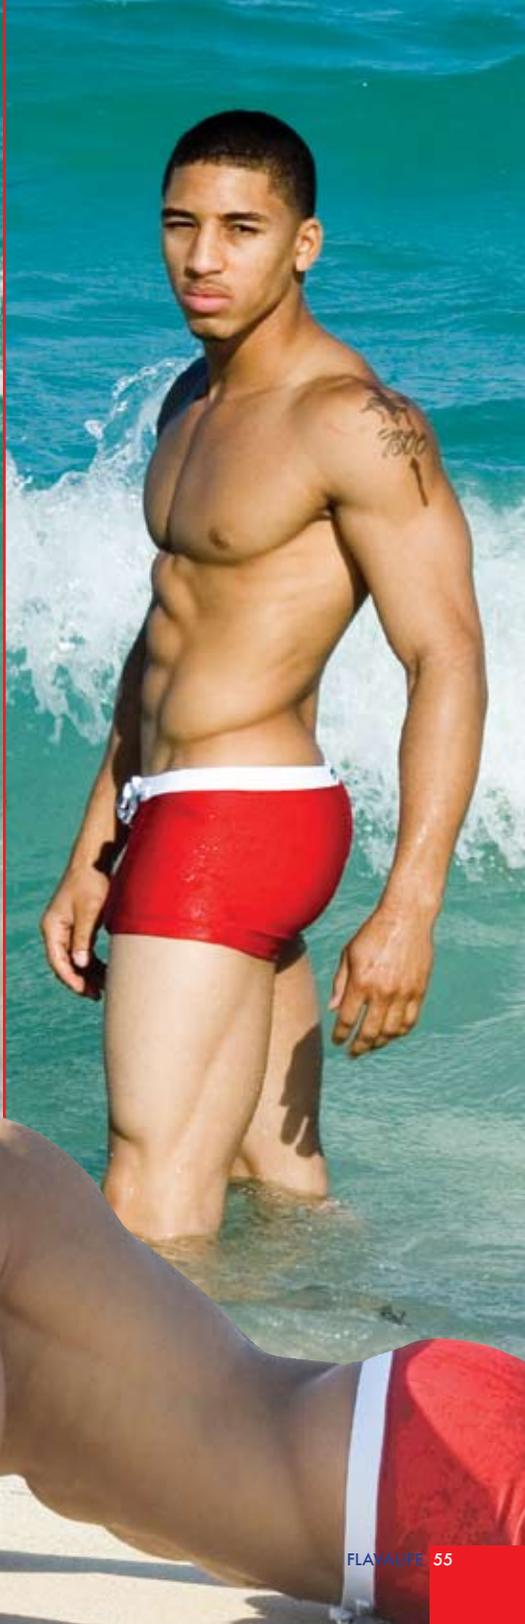

"Never say never, bro. For real. Take this magazine shoot, for instance. I told ya all I would never do all nude, but when that camera was clicking for this I was getting so turned on, now I'm thinkin' about it. Like it might not be a bad idea, after all."

Whoa. And if the girlfriend finds out? Or worse yet - objects?

"Hey, I'm a man, ya know? No female dictates what I do." Carlos shrugs again as he adds, "Besides, she's happy if she knows I'm happy."

Wow. You'd have to give out vouchers for that line - for sure!

Black Gay Greeting Cards Challenge Lack of Diversity and Visibility

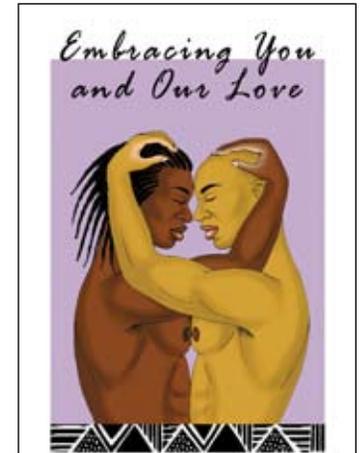

Lavenderpop Greeting Cards are contemporary cards appealing to Black lesbian, gay, bi, and trans (lgbt) consumers, friends and family. Lavenderpop was created to confront the lack of diversity among the major greeting card companies as well as smaller gay themed card lines. "The few gay cards I would see at specialty shops have virtually no people of color images," says Otis Richardson the owner and artist of the twenty card line. "I wanted to create a line that represented this influential but overlooked community. I've spoken to many store managers who've told me how hard it is to find quality Black greeting cards." Otis adds, "Lavenderpop also serves to enhance our relationships and friendships. People in our community are thrilled to send and receive cards that look like us."

Richardson chose to focus on everyday type cards instead of specific holidays. The cards cover such categories as Happy Birthday, Romance, Diva Humor, and Get Well. More specialty cards include HIV awareness, Youth and Bi pride. Launched in August of 2004, the cards are now carried in 12 stores in 6 cities. In Chicago: Women and Children First, Cupid's Treasure, Ragin' RaeJean's Gifts & Stuff, Yera's Lakeview Florist, and Open Door Books Et Cetera. Philadelphia: Giovanni's Room. Nashville: OUTLOUD Books & Gifts. Washington DC: Pulp, Pulp on the Hill, and Lambda Rising. Baltimore: Lambda Rising. Ferndale: Just 4 Us. They can also be purchased online at www.lavenderpop.com.

For many years there has been a cultural maturity among Black gays. This is evident in the proliferation of Black gay literature, magazines, independent movies, social and internet groups, and Black Pride celebrations.

Lavenderpop Greeting Cards satisfy a niche group, but also has broad appeal. Although the cards were created for the Black lgbt community, many of the styles are relatable regardless of race or sexual orientation. Otis states "I created a card titled 'They Call These Divas?' It's intended to be sent to anyone who has a real diva attitude. It doesn't matter if they're Black, white, Latin, female, male, gay, or straight. It's a fun card that crosses all lines."

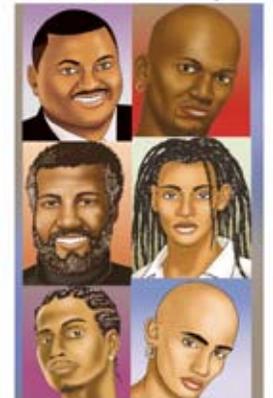

Otis Richardson recognized his God given talent for art at an early age. He has studied painting and illustration on the undergraduate and graduate levels. His work has appeared in several lgbt publications including THING, Windy City Times, OUTlines, Blackfire, and OUT! Resource Guide. All cards are illustrated and written by Mr. Richardson. His involvement in the Black same gender loving community includes membership in Church of the Open Door, Brothers of the Open Door, Blacks for Gay Marriage, and Adodi Chicago. ■
